"The White King of Manoa" by Josepn Hatton is published by R. F. Fenno & Co., 9 and 11 East Sixteenth street, New York. A realistic story of seafaring and adventure in the days of Queen Elizabeth, when her darling buccaneers crowded sail to explore the unknown seas for new worlds and found them. This tale deals with the times in England at that wonderful age of the world. As well as with the scenes in the new world of North and South America. It pictures Sir Walter Raleigh's expedition against the Spaniards in the West Indies. The rivalries of Cecil and Essex for the favor of the virgin queen are also a fruitful field for writer with a penchant for the entertaining and the dramatic. Cloth with illuminated covers. $1.25.

"The Puritan Republic," by Daniel

Wait Howe is another added to the nany volumes concerning the beginning of the great commonwealth of our per secuted forefathers. This volume essays to be a FAIR statement of the case, written possibly to off-set the numerous sistories of the period which simply reflect their authors' prejudices for or against the puritans pioneers. Mr. Howe in his preface says: "I have essayed the still more difficult task of tracing the evolution of a commonwealth from a colony, of a constitution from a charter, of a republic from a ems to fill the minds of the rising corporation." He begins with the vilcenerations of boys at least.
